Ana Rose Ross Campbell was a remarkable woman who dedicated her life to serving others. Born in 1853 in New York City, she began her career as a nurse in 1873, at a time when nursing was still in its early stages of professionalization. Campbell was a passionate advocate for improving the standards of nursing care, and she played a key role in the founding of the American Nurses Association (ANA) in 1896.

In addition to her work as a nurse, Campbell was also a dedicated social worker. She was a founding member of the National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses (NACGN) in 1908, and she served as its president from 1910 to 1912. The NACGN was the first organization of its kind, and it played a vital role in advancing the careers of African American nurses.

Campbell was also a tireless volunteer with the Red Cross. She served as a nurse during the Spanish-American War, and she later worked with the Red Cross to provide relief to victims of natural disasters and other emergencies. In 1914, she was awarded the Red Cross's Florence Nightingale Medal, the highest honor that can be bestowed on a nurse.

Campbell's legacy extends far beyond her own lifetime. She was a pioneer in the nursing profession, and her work helped to improve the standards of care for all patients. She was also a dedicated social worker, and her work with the NACGN helped to advance the careers of African American nurses. And she was a tireless volunteer with the Red Cross, and her work helped to save countless lives.

Ana Rose Ross Campbell was a remarkable woman who dedicated her life to serving others. Her legacy is one of love, service, and compassion, and she continues to inspire nurses and social workers today.
