Seton wrote over 40 books and articles about his experiences in the wilderness. His work has been translated into more than 20 languages and has inspired generations of readers.

The Cree And Salteaux Indians

The Cree and Salteaux Indians are two closely related Algonquian-speaking peoples who have lived in the Canadian wilderness for centuries.

The Cree are the largest First Nations group in Canada, with a population of over 200,000 people. They live in a vast territory that stretches from the Rocky Mountains to the Atlantic Ocean.

The Salteaux are a smaller group, with a population of around 10,000 people. They live in a region of southern Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan.

Both the Cree and Salteaux are traditionally nomadic peoples who relied on hunting, fishing, and trapping for their livelihood.

In the early 20th century, the Cree and Salteaux were facing many challenges. Their traditional way of life was being threatened by the encroachment of settlers and the fur trade.

Seton's book, By Canoe and Dog Train Among the Cree and Salteaux Indians, offers a unique glimpse into the lives of these two peoples during a time of great change.
